CINCINNATI, April 25, 2019 /PRNewswire/ -- The Society of Professional Journalists has selected "Case Cleared," a joint investigation from Newsy, Reveal from the Center for Investigative Reporting and ProPublica, as the recipient of a Sigma Delta Chi Award for excellence in journalism.

"Case Cleared: How Rape Goes Unpunished in America" won in the online investigative journalism category.

The investigation, released in 2018, uncovered how dozens of cities in America are making many rape cases look as if they are solved without actually arresting a suspected rapist. "Case Cleared" found that in those cities, exceptional clearance, a type of clearance intended to be the exception, has instead become the rule for closing rape cases.

For the project – reported by Newsy's Mark Greenblatt and Mark Fahey; ProPublica's Bernice Yeung; and Reveal's Emily Harris – reporters requested data from the 100 largest police jurisdictions and analyzed more than 70,000 rape cases. Almost half of those who responded cleared more rape cases by "exceptional means" than by making an arrest.

The investigation also uncovered a major flaw in the FBI's new system for tracking crime reports, the National Incident-Based Reporting System (NIBRS). Cases classified as "unfounded," where police either do not believe the victim or do not believe the crime occurred, are no longer tracked – erasing any trace of this practice in the FBI's new system.

The reporting led the FBI to expedite a process to reform NIBRS rules in a way that is expected to require the nation's police agencies to report unfounded crimes. A key advisory board will vote on the recommendations in June. If approved, they will go to the FBI director for implementation. Local police departments across the country also are looking at their process and making changes to how sexual assault cases are cleared.

"'Case Cleared' is helping bring accountability and transparency to how crimes are closed," said Ellen Weiss, vice president and bureau chief of the Scripps Washington Bureau. "It's collaborative journalism like this that can drive important change and empower citizens to hold people in positions of power accountable for acting in the public interest."

"Case Cleared" aired on two episodes of the "Reveal" podcast and public radio show and on Newsy's cable channel and over-the-top streaming platforms in November 2018. Newsy aired the investigation via an hourlong special report on Dec. 15 and 16 on its cable channel. The investigation also can be viewed at newsy.com/casecleared.

The Sigma Delta Chi Awards date to 1932, when the Society of Professional Journalists first honored six individuals for contributions to journalism. The winners will be honored at the National Press Club in June in Washington, D.C.
