Cintas, a leader in secure document management services, is sponsoring a web seminar with ARMA International, the authority on information governance, to offer guidance for beginning and maintaining a payment card industry (PCI) compliant program. Facilitator Andrew Altepeter, an information governance analyst at Motorola Solutions, Inc., summarized actual data breaches to help records and information management (RIM) professionals better understand the importance of compliance to prevent potential breaches.

"The increase in electronic data has made protecting sensitive information more challenging," said Sarah Koucky, Senior Director of Security and Compliance, Cintas Document Management. "It is important for Records Information Management (RIM), Information Technology (IT) and governance professionals to be aware of key must-haves for a compliance program to mitigate risk and avoid costly fines and lawsuits."

Any organization that processes customer payment cards must comply with the PCI Data Security Standards (PCI DSS). Penalties for non-compliance can be catastrophic to a business. Failure to comply can result in fines, lost revenue and customer lawsuits.

Upon completion of the web seminar, participants are able to:

- Describe the PCI Data Security Standard requirements
- Define the steps needed to set up a compliant PCI program
- Identify RIM-specific considerations in a PCI program
- Recognize the requirements for maintaining a PCI-compliant organization
