

Wynn Resorts employee claimed to have been raped, impregnated by Steve Wynn - WSJ
Tuesday, January 29, 2019 04:22:42 AM (GMT)

- In a front-page story, the WSJ reports that the company agrees that a report from the Nevada Gaming Control Board largely lines up with its own findings that executives willfully ignored accusations regarding Steve Wynn's sexual behavior.
- Citing the report, the article gives greater detail of Steve Wynn's alleged sexual misconduct beyond what the WSJ has previously reported.
- A person familiar with the matter tells the WSJ that the report was based on taped interviews investigators conducted.
- The article says that the report names people who ignored employee concerns including former president/COO Marc Schorr; Wynn Resorts says that no employee named in the report who knew about the allegations against Steve Wynn before the 2018 WSJ article was published is still with the company.
- A person familiar with the matter tells the WSJ that Nevada regulators didn't use information from Massachusetts regulators in its report; the article reminds readers that Steve Wynn is suing the Massachusetts regulators over their report.

Reference Links:

- Wall Street Journal

Industries: Casinos & Gaming

Primary Identifiers: 1128-HK, WYNN-US

Related Identifiers: 1128-HK, WYNN-US

Subjects: Articles, Reports, Conjecture, Media Summaries, Other Regulatory, Published Reports, Regulatory

Related Stories:

- Wynn Resorts issues statement on settlement with the Nevada Gaming Control Board
- Wynn Resorts' probe of sexual misconduct riddled with missteps -- WSJ
- Wynn Resorts executives served as enablers for Steve Wynn's sexual misconduct - WSJ
- Wynn Resorts trading lower: circulation of WSJ article alleging sexual misconduct by Steve Wynn cited